For almost 38 years, 37 years and 10 months to be precise, the tribal forestry department has been home to Bert Davids. Bert and coworkers from the forestry hydrology department celebrated lunch with Bert on his final day. Best wishes on your retirement.

NY Gov. Vetoes Unmarked Grave Act
BY JENNA KUNZE, JANUARY 03, 2023
As the clock ticked down on 2022, New York State Governor Kathy Hochul vetoed a bill that would have protected unmarked burials of Native American ancestors from unintentional excavation. The bill, titled the Protection of Unmarked Graves Act, passed the state legislature unanimously in June. The law would have implemented several measures to protect unmarked graves, including requiring construction be stopped on private property if human remains were encountered; creating a Native American burial-site review committee; and allowing tribes and individuals to seek

Forest Update

The combination of the tornado and straight-line winds that came through the reservation in June of 2022 left out forest destroyed. Since then our Forestry team, made up of Forestry employees, Forestry Committee, and Tribal Council, have worked tirelessly to try and control the damage. Tribal Forester Paul Koll has worked to develop a plan that will develop our forests for the future. There is no exact timeline on when this will be completed but the Tribe is putting its best effort into saving our forest and salvaging what they can. The storm’s damage was catastrophic to our forests, and though there is no science to exactly tell how many acres were

Open Call ForForge Project 2023 Fellowship
(Mahicanntuck River Valley, NY - January 5, 2022) — Forge Project, a Native-led arts and decolonial education initiative on the unceded homelands of the Muh-he-con-ne-ok in Upstate New York, is pleased to announce its open call for applications for its 2023 funded fellowship program for Indigenous artists, scholars, organizers, cultural workers, researchers, and educators. The application will be live starting Friday, January 6, 2023 and applications are due Wednesday, February 15, 2023, by 11:59 PM EST.

About the Fellowship
Forge Project is seeking a 2023 cohort of six Indigenous individuals that represent a broad diversity of cultural practices, participatory research and organizing models, and geographical contexts that honor Indigenous pasts.

Cheesy Meatball Casserole
March Make & Take 2023

Ingredients
2 lb (900g) ground turkey
1 cup shredded mozzarella
1/2 cup grated or shredded parmesan
1 egg
2 teaspoons onion powder
2 teaspoons fresh minced garlic
1/2 teaspoon Italian seasoning blend
1/2 teaspoon fresh crooked black pepper
1/2 teaspoon Cayenne pepper, optional
1/2 teaspoon crushed red chili pepper flakes, optional
1 cup Marinara sauce
1 cup shredded cheese of your choice for topping (Mozzarella, Provolone, Monterey Jack, Cheddar...)

Fresh basil or parsley, for topping

Directions
1. To prepare the meatballs casserole recipe: Preheat your oven to 400°F (200°C). Lightly spray a casserole dish with cooking spray.
2. Combine ground turkey, mozzarella, parmesan, egg, onion powder, garlic, Italian seasoning, Cayenne, crushed chili pepper flakes in a large salad bowl – except for the Marinara sauce, 1 cup cheese, and fresh basil that are set aside for the casserole. Use a small cookie scoop to form the meatballs all the same size and arrange the meatballs in the casserole dish.
3. Bake your meatballs casserole for 15 to 20 minutes or until fully cooked. Remove the meatballs casserole from the oven and drain the grease.
4. Top with the low carb Marinara sauce and shredded cheese and put the meatballs casserole back in the oven, Bake for an additional 5 to 10 minutes until the cheese has fully melted.
5. Serve the low carb meatballs casserole with a side salad or over zucchini noodles as pictured. Enjoy!
The Forge Project space consists of two structures designed by Ai Weiwei in collaboration with HHF Architects. The larger of the two buildings consists of four equal-sized boxes, where Forge Project hosts its public programming, including special-topic talks with Fellows. Parallel to the main building is a Y-shaped building; the upper floor features a circular skylight that illuminates a central art gallery, and houses a fluid living and studio space for Fellows.

The 2023 Fellows will have the opportunity to present their work to the local Forge Project audience on site as well as a wider international audience via social media. Fellows will work one-on-one with Curator of Indigenous Programs & Community Engagement Sarah Biscarra Dilley (Northern Chumash) to develop public programming, to make connections and build contacts, and for mentorship during their stay.

About the Jury

The Forge Project Fellowship 2023 applications will be reviewed by a juried panel of six distinguished Native scholars, artists, writers, and former Fellows. The two Fellows from the Stockbridge Munsee Community will be selected in a parallel process by a separate juried panel of three Native experts in their fields including a former Fellow.

Application & Eligibility

Interested individuals can learn more about the application and how to apply via Forge Project’s Submittable page. Applicants must be registered members of federally or state-recognized tribe to apply for the 2023 Forge Project Fellowship. The Stockbridge Munsee Community Fellows will have the additional requirement of applying with a specific project that furthers the initiatives of the Cultural Services Division. For full details, selection criteria, key dates and the link to apply, visit forgeproject.com/fellowship.

Past Fellows

Forge Project’s 2022 cohort of six Indigenous individuals represents a broad diversity of cultural practices, participatory research, organizing models, and geographic contexts that honor Indigenous pasts as well as build Native futures. The 2022 Forge Projects Fellows are Catherine Blackburn (Dene); Laura Ortman (White Mountain Apache); Rainer Posselt (Stockbridge Munsee Band of Mohicans); Sara Siestreem (Hanis Coos of Coos, Lower Umpqua, and Siuslaw Indians); and Tania Willard (Secwépemc Nation); and Illegvak Williams (Yup’ik).

About Forge Project

Forge Project is a Native-led initiative centered on Indigenous art, decolonial education, and supporting leaders in culture, food security, and land justice. Located on the unceded homelands of the Muh-he-con-ne-ok in New York, Forge Project works to upend political and social systems formed through generations of settler colonialism. Launched in 2021, Forge Project serves the social and cultural landscape of shared communities through a funded fellowship program for Indigenous culture workers, including those working in food and land justice, law and decolonial governance, and art. Forge hosts Native-led public education and events, a lending art collection focused on contemporary art by Indigenous artists, and art-, land-, and food-based educational programming at the Community Learning Kitchen developed in partnership with Sky High Farm.

injunctions against violators. Gov. Hochul vetoed the bill on Dec. 30 because it fails to "balance the rights of property owners with the interests of the families of lineal descendants and other groups," she wrote in her veto memo.

According to proponents of the bill who negotiated with Hochul’s legal counsel daily for roughly a week leading up to her veto, Hochul’s staff added an amended clause to the bill that negated its intent.

“We were working up until the day that she vetoed it,” Tela Troge, a member of the Shinnecock Nation of Long Island and the Shinnecock Graves Protection Warrior Society, told Native News Online. “We were going through the hypothetical situation: what if the development of either a residential or commercial project unearthed a mass burial site of 250 individuals — what would the process be?”

Currently, New York is one of only four states—including New Jersey and Wyoming—that does not have a process when burials are unearthed on private property through unintentional excavation. Unmarked grave protection legislation was drafted in Ohio, but it failed to meet the threshold for introduction in the Ohio General Assembly. The new law would have established a legal process that would include notifying a local coroner who would call the state archeologist and entrusting the remains’ handling to lineal descendants or culturally-affiliated groups, as well as establishing criminal penalties for those who don’t comply with the law.

“We were able to reason with them...that all sides involved need a process,” Trog said. “The police need a process; the property owner needs a process; the affiliated group needs a process — because it’s not just about Indigenous remains. The remains of enslaved people and Revolutionary War soldiers are also at risk for unintentional disturbance. “And so (Hochul’s assistant counsel) David Perino was insisting that they could not pass the bill as the legislation intended because the property owner needed to have the complete discretion to remove the bodies or the remains.”

What’s the background? Over the last two decades, there have been several grave desecrations on Long Island. In 2003, a developer on Shelter Island, off the coast of Long Island, unearthed a mass grave site on the property, then built a horse barn over the site. In just the last two years, a local task force of roughly half a dozen Algonquian-speaking tribes from Long Island has reclaimed more than 150 human remains unearthed by archeologists and museums in Suffolk County — Long Island’s easternmost county — in the late 1800s and early 1900s.

Proponents of the law, including tribal members from two separate graves protection groups on Long Island — Shinnecock Graves Protection Warrior Society and Honor Our Indigenous Ancestors, Inc.— have been introducing unmarked burial protection legislation since 2002. The most recent bill was introduced in 2021 by former state Sen. John Brooks (D-Nassau County).

The offending clause. Unkechaug Nation Chief Harry Wallace, who lives on the Poospatuck Reservation in Mastic, Long Island, is one of the leaders involved in a decades-long effort to pass legislation to protect unmarked graves. Wallace told Native News Online he was hopeful the law would pass Hochul’s desk before Dec. 31 since it was the first time it passed the legislature.

In August, tribal members began requesting to meet with Gov. Hochul’s team as the end of the year crept closer, and the governor still hadn’t signed the graves protection bill. Wallace was among a handful of tribal members, lobbying representatives, and senators who met with Hochul’s legal team for about a week through Christmas Day to work through the bill.

Wallace told Native News Online that the governor’s proposal to amend the law negates the entire purpose of the law.

“We thought the bill was a strong bill until they added the offending clause that said that ... if the property owner — that’s a euphemism for developer — that if nothing has been done within 60 days, he can remove the bodies himself,” he said. “You negate the entire process by waiting out 60 days. Nothing happens within 60 days ... they can’t even get a permit within 60 days, but they can remove bodies within 60 days?”

Hochul wrote in her memo that, while she “recognize[s] the need for a process to address the handling of unearthed human remains in a way that is respectful to lineal descendants or culturally-affiliated groups, any process addressing the handling of unmarked human remains that also involves the private property of New Yorkers must appropriately protect both interests.”

‘Money talks louder than respecting human remains’

Gov. Hochul broke records in 2021 during her campaign for New York state governor when she raised $21.6 million in campaign donations, with the largest checks coming from the state’s largest real estate developers.

Campaign records show that Hochul’s donations included: $55,000 from Douglas Durst, who oversees a multibillion-dollar real estate empire and chairs the Real Estate Board of New York; $60,000 from the Rechler family, who owns a leading real estate company in New York; and more than $400,000 from real estate companies across New York City.

In addition to vetoing the Protection of Unmarked Graves Act, Hochul also vetoed another bill that would have given the Montaukett Indian Nation on Long Island state recognition, which also passed the state assembly.

A third bill that would have established an office of Native American affairs never made it out of committee.

“Look what she’s done,” Wallace said. “She vetoed all the legislation relative to dealing with issues that affect Indigenous communities in the state.”

Moving forward, Troge and Wallace say that they plan to continue to introduce legislation to protect unmarked burial sites in New York.

“Now, we move forward,” Wallace said. “We try and figure out a way to overcome an anticipated veto. But we’re not going to give up.”

damaged, the tribe partnered with SilvaCart (a UW-Madison Affiliate), to analyze aerial photos from the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources. WI-DNR photos were taken in past years prior to the storm coming through and compared to new aerial photos taken just days after the storm. Through boots on the ground work they found SilvaCart’s assessment to be amazingly accurate. The tribe is hoping to harvest/salvage 6900 acres of damaged, uprooted timber. The Natural Resource Conservation Service (NRCS) is a government organization that promotes healthy resource conservation practices through funding opportunities. The Tribal Forestry Department partners with the NRCS on projects like timber marking, timber stand improvements, forest trail construction, aquatic organism passages (culverts and such), native plantings, as well as many other opportunities. The Tribe’s Agriculture department also works closely with them to fund projects that otherwise would be beyond our current budget’s capabilities. Since the storm the tribe has come up with a timber salvage plan. The recommended treatment across all units is Woody Residue Treatment- #2 Restoration or Conservation treatment Following Catastrophic Events to alleviate insect and disease risks, wildfire risk, and to promote future stand health and regeneration. The Forestry department has broken up the damaged area into 23 units. Each unit is currently being logged or in line to be logged. The tribe has seven different logging companies working right now. This is more than double the logging companies to be on the reservation in a normal year. The following is the Harvest Direction and Order of Removal for all Salvage Units:

1. Salvage snapped, tipped, and root sprung trees.
2. Salvage trees with greater than 50% crown damage.
3. Salvage white ash in effected areas due to EAB which has been confirmed in three locations this year.
4. Possibly, Salvage damaged red oak due to increased oak wilt risk within effected areas.
5. Harvest all previously marked timber from marked sales within the salvage unit.
6. Salvage within the 300ft buffer according to TC direction.
7. Salvage within the Upland Reserve according to TC direction.
8. Salvage within wetlands so long as it can be done without damage to the soil (reach in and pull out stems).
9. Any areas with assumed residuals below the C-Line (Solomon 1987).

A little into the logging history of Wisconsin will help shape the story of where we are at. Before European-American settlement from 1825 until 1880, between 63 percent of the land area would become Wisconsin and was covered with forests. But when Wisconsin opened up to intensive European-American settlement in the early 1800’s, things changed. There was an increasing demand on natural resources, and in the late 1860’s-after the Civil War, logging became a major part of Wisconsin’s economy. The logging industry started around 1840 before Wisconsin incorporated as a state in 1848. At the time more than 80 percent of the state was covered in trees. In the 1890s, loggers thought that they could cut forever without damaging the land. Almost every city located north of a line drawn from Fond du Lac to La Crosse began as a lumber town in Wisconsin. Lumbering improved and expanded transportation facilities. It cleared land for agriculture. It gave employment to settlers and provided a market for agricultural products. It brought money as well as people from other areas and helped populate the state. It fostered the establishment of many secondary industries that used wood as raw material. The logging industry in Wisconsin did a great deal of good for the state as well as the nation. Many of the logs were sawed into lumber at the mills in Eau Claire during the spring and summer months and were used in the area. Others were strapped together to make big rafts and floated down the Mississippi River to build cities to the south. In fact, lumber from Eau Claire mills helped rebuild Chicago following its tragic fire on October 8th, 1871, and between 1899 and 1904, Wisconsin led the nation in lumber production. Truly, Wisconsin lumber helped build the nation. Sadly by 1920, they had pretty much depleted the whole state. During those 60 or 70 years they really changed the geography of Wisconsin, building dams, changing the course of rivers, cutting down trees. What was left after the logging? Fields of stumps that needed to be cleared to make room for the state’s next big industry, one that gives Wisconsin its identity today: farming. Today, of Wisconsin’s 35 million acres of land, forests cover about 16 million acres, which is roughly 46 percent of the state’s total area. The forest industry is among the top ten employers in 48 of the 50 states. Altogether, the forest industry boasts an annual national payroll exceeding 26 billion dollars. More than 6 million acres of forested land offer a wealth of recreational opportunities, contain priceless ecological treasures, and provide economic stability for the state. Looking at those lush forests now, it is hard to believe that a view of the same areas around 1900 would have shown a vast wasteland of stumps. It has taken 100 years of time and investments by many landowners, foresters, and leaders to recover Wisconsin’s greatest resource from the cutover-abandoned land that was left over after the Cut Over. The Cut Over was the name given to the lands that has been logged off into nothing. In some areas of the reservation the storm removed big pieces of timber and it reminds some of the Cut Over. Tribal forestry is hoping that this salvage plan, alongside working with groups like the NRCS and others, that they can help shape this disaster into something. In some areas the damage almost completely wiped out the timber, in these areas it’s almost like a blank slate and with the right forestry management plan we move towards the growth of new timber, like the big timber that once stood in its place.

Dove cont from pg Three: being the district Reading Specialist, Brandi was able to work with all students that needed a little extra help with their reading skills, and she was able to aid the district with choosing an updated and culturally appropriate reading series, facilitated numerous book fairs, and family nights. Brandi also worked with students who spoke English as a Second Language (EL), to become more proficient with English.

In 2022 Brandi again chose to grow in her leadership abilities by applying for and becoming hired as Bowler Elementary Principal. She is still working with EL students, overseeing family night events, supporting teachers in their literacy instruction, organizing testing, and holding data meetings to ensure all students receive what is needed to aid in their educational success.

When Brandi has free time, she enjoys crocheting and selling her items at the Shawano Farmer’s Market along with other craft shows, reading various genres of books, running and working out, hiking, and traveling making memories with her family and friends.

She is a member of the Mohican Veterans organization and also enjoys attending Powwows and fundraising events. She is currently the Mohican Veterans Public Relations Officer and also operates the organization’s Facebook page along with Larry Hill.

Radon occurs naturally in the ground and can enter your home through cracks and holes in your foundation, or even through your well water. The amount of radon in the soil depends on soil chemistry and can vary from house to house. In Shawano County, radon varies from low to very high, with some homes on the Reservation having very high levels.

Keep you and your family safe this year by getting your home tested for radon. FREE test kits are available to Tribal members through the Environmental Department. Contact the Environmental Department to have your home tested! If your house tests high for radon, the Environmental Department can provide advice on having a radon mitigation system installed into your home.
